Talented Musician.

Below is reprinted a notice from the Muskegon (Mich.) Times, of Feb. 9, telling of the enthusiastic reception tendered Axel Skovgaard, the great violinist, at that place.

This celebrated Danish violinist will appear in Paris, Tuesday night, Feb. 27, at the City School Auditorium, under the auspices of the Richard Hawes Chapter, Daughters of the Confederacy, for the benefit of their Educational Fund.

The notice from the Muskegon Times is as follows:

"That 'music hath charms,' was aptly demonstrated at the Woman's Club last evening, when the noted violinist, Axel Skovgaard, rippled sonatas and Scandinavian songs from the bow of his Stradivarius violin, like morning lays from the golden throat of a Nightingale. This wonderful musician has that rare quality of genius which imparts to his audience the moods of the composer and when he drops his fingers caressingly upon the strings of his violin, and draws the bow across, the instrument laughs and weeps, and bursts forth in joyous song as the finale is reached. Skovgaard had with him and used at last night's concert, his celebrated Stradivarius violin, which is said to be worth $13,000.

"Concert soloists who assisted Skovgaard at last evening's concert were Miss Ethel May Wright and Miss Alice McClung, both rarely talented artists. Miss Wright possesses a fine mezzo soprano voice, and Miss McClung is mistress of the piano. The program ranged from Mendelssohn's concertos and Arias from Samson and Delilah to Irish love songs and minuets. At the close of the program Skovgaard played three compositions, efforts of his, when he was a lad between 8 and 12 years. That he early showed the master musician, was demonstrated in these compositions that might be the dream of a Mendelssohn. The club house was filled to the last seat, the lovers of fine music turned out enthusiastically to hear the much talked of Skovgaard concert."

Confederate Bill Passes Senate.

The Kentucky Senate by a vote of 30 to 0 passed the Glenn bill, providing a pension of $10 a month for disabled and indigent Confederate soldiers. Not a voice was raised against the passage of the measure.

Senator Glenn explained the bill saying it would cost $60,000 while Senator Bertram chairman of the Appropriations Committee declared it would cost twice that amount. It was the opinion of Senator Salmon that every Senator ought to vote for the measure.

Senator Biggerstaff, the Republican member of the Senate from Warren, said that at one time he would never have voted a dollar to pension Confederate soldiers, but that time had settled all differences and healed the breach, bitterness had vanished, and that the cost should not be counted. He urged that the measure receive the unanimous support of the Senate, as the men who were to be benefited were brave men and fought for what they thought was right.

The committee amendment providing that no widow of a soldier who married the soldier since 1890 should be entitled to a pension was passed.

Clay's Bill Reported Favorable.

House Bill No. 304, introduced at Frankfort by Hon. Sidney G. Clay, and which allows railroads to acquire a competing line, where said line does not extend 100 miles in trackage, was favorably reported by the Committee having same in charge Thursday instead of being killed by the Committee as was erroneously printed. The purpose of this bill is to allow the Louisville and Nashville railroad to retain the ownership of the Frankfort and Cincinnati railroad, which they have acquired by purchase, and which the Court of Appeals held was in violation of the Kentucky Statutes, regarding ownership of competing lines.

THEATRICAL.

"THE COUNTRY BOY."

Edgar Selwyn, the author of "The Country Boy," the original comedy which Henry B. Harris will present at the Paris Grand on next Wednesday, February 21, wrote some twenty-six plays before he finally produced this one to bring him fame and fortune. And much of the secret of the success of "The Country Boy" is due to the fact that the author has put in many chapters from his own personal experiences. The story rings true and the characters are so realistic that their like may be found in any town or city.

The story of "The Country Boy" is of a visionary young fellow who is only going to do the big things. He is not satisfied to take the little successes of life and build on them but he is going to conquer all at once with one fell stroke. Hence he finds the bonds of his small home town irksome and boring. He wants to strike out, go to New York and lay the metropolis at his feet. At last his mother consents that he shall make the trial.

In New York he lands in a typical theatrical boarding house. An old friend of his father has given him a job. He becomes enamored of a mercenary chorus girl who plays with him. He loses his incentive to work in forgetting the sweetheart of his youth. He is discontented and neglects his duties, loses his place and is unable to find another. Things go from bad to worse until at last ashamed and beaten he determines to take his own life. At the critical moment a cynical, worldly-wise newspaper man who lives in the same house and has taken a fancy to the boy comes upon the scene.

By playing on his own imagination the friend makes the boy preach against taking his own life. He then convinces him that the home town however small must hold better opportunities than the city with its terrible crush and competition. Together they return to the boy's home and win success in a material way and with that success the boy regains the confidence of his sweetheart and marries her.

The play presents many interesting and contrasting characters. All of them are splendidly drawn and the piece holds the attention of the audience from beginning to end. In the company are included Helen Hammell, Wilfred Lytell, Stapleton Kent, Lovell Oldham, Beatrice Bertrand, Lizzie McCall, William Morren, William Lewis, Marie Pert, Mart E. Mann and others.

Asks Stout to Vacate Bench.

In the Circuit Court at Georgetown Tuesday something of a sensation was caused when Attorneys L. F. Sinclair and James F. Askew, representing the accused, filed a petition asking for the removal of Judge R. L. Stout from the bench in the trial of City Treasurer John White charged with assault on Editor Thomason of the Georgetown News.

White was indicted for assaulting Thomason by the Scott county grand jury, and the action was preliminary to the trial. The petition seeking to swear Judge Stout off the bench makes some strong allegations tending to show strained relations between White and Judge Stout.

Judge Stout has expressed his willingness to vacate the bench and the trial will not proceed until a special judge can be decided upon.
